It rained all day and Sarah Jane surveyed the dismal scene; her face against the window pane, she gazed, and cried. "How mean! Here I'm condemned to stay inside, and mope and break my heart, when I would like to take a ride in Willie's chug-chug cart! Oh, rain, you spoil this life of mine, you make me wail and sob! The sun should have to pay a fine for loafing on its job!" Said Gladys Mae Rebecca. "Hoos! This weather can't be beat! It's just the stuff for men and brutes, and also for the wheat. What more could any one desire than such a day as this, when one can sit before the fire, and read, in perfect bliss? The music of the blessed rain, as on the roof it falls, should soothe away our every pain, and heal our harness galls. I like the sunshine when it gleams on hill and bosky dell, but when the rain gets wet and streams, I like that just as well." Then Gladys Mae Rebecca took the Uplift Magazine, and in the cozy inglenook enjoyed the afternoon; while Sarah Jane, with gloomy mind, looked forth at gusty showers, and, in a manner most refined, she cursed the dragging hours.

Clean Up-Paint Up Signs to Be Displayed at Opening of Spring Campaign.

Orders for more than 1,500 "clean up-paint up" signs, to be displayed on delivery wagons, automobiles and other business vehicles, have already been received by the clean up-paint up committee, which is to conduct a campaign in Washington, beginning Easter Monday.

These signs are painted on muslin and are to be attached to vehicles by means of strings, so that the vehicles will not be marred or defaced in any way. The committee expects to place at least 10,000 "clean up-paint up" buttons among the school children of the District.

These buttons, as well as the signs for business vehicles, are to be furnished by the committee free of charge.

A meeting of the clean up-paint up executive committee is to be held Tuesday evening in the rooms of the Master House Painters and Decorators' Association in the Corcoran building, at which reports are to be made of progress on the clean up-paint up plans.

PUPILS ARE INSTRUCTED IN ANSWERING OF 'ADS'

Proper Way to Apply for a Position Taught at O Street Vocational School.

A study of newspaper advertisements and the making of them practical for instruction purposes is being tried at the O Street Vocational School as a part of the English course in that institution.

Using a "want ad" clipped from a newspaper which calls for a young man or woman in the sort of trade represented by the classes at the school, a pupil, as a prospective employer seeking work, makes application in person to the teacher of the class, who represents the employer.

The pupil is closely questioned by the teacher. Questions which will bring out the qualifications and the lack of qualifications are asked the pupil.

The teacher does not interrupt the questioning. The conference between employer and applicant is carried on in the presence of the class and the pupils write down any comments which seem worthy of note. The manner of approach and departure of the pupil is carefully observed. After the conference the pupils give their criticisms under the direction and guidance of the teacher. Then the teacher gives a criticism and advises the student applicant on the necessary phases of the conference.

Personal Application Important.

In commenting on the experiment J. Moria Saunders, principal of the school, said:

"The ability to make personal application for a position in answer to an advertisement is, to my mind, almost as important as being qualified. To want a position and to know how to ask for a position are two entirely different propositions. Many persons of excellent qualifications have failed to get work because they could not prove their abilities before an employer, because they did not know how to ask for what they wanted and because they did not make a favorable impression upon the employer."

The pupils who will go from this training school to earn their livelivelihood in their various industries direct upon graduation. The plan gives the teacher opportunity to instruct pupils in the courtesy of greeting an employer and, as a part of the English work, splendid opportunity for practice in expression. Important also is the fact that personal appearance and manner are essential in making application, and these are not overlooked by the teacher."

She tells the court she was married at Forest Glen, Md., July 15, 1901, and complains that her husband's treatment of her leaves much to be desired. She says her homes provided for her were not in the best condition, and declares that on one occasion he tried to compel her to occupy an "old shack" on Spring road. This building, she avers, did not afford protection from the elements. The wife is represented by Attorney Andrew I. Hickey.
